Crayfish Traps

The most efficient way of catching freshwater crayfish

Freshwater crayfish, a sort of miniature lobster, are native to our lakes and rivers; the indigenous species found in Britain is the Small White-Clawed (Astacus pallipes) but they are increasingly rare due to pollution and being eaten out of house and home by the imported Red Signal which has all but wiped them out.

Farmed freshwater crayfish are a different species, the Red Signal (Pacifastacus leniusculus) come from the West coast of America and have the advantage of being bigger in size, faster growing and disease resistant. These are now much more common than our native White Clawed crayfish which are protected.

Our traps are very efficient at catching these little beasts, they come complete with a bait box (oily fish or cat food are a good bait), are made from plastic and stainless
